Property Description

This unique property was initially purchased by the seller in 1993 and has been their primary residence ever since. The property, which consists of a main ocean view home with two cabins, sits between two creeks on approximately 2 acres. The seller's dream started in the late 1980s when they came to Costa Rica on a short vacation. They loved the Dominical area for its laid-back, bohemian feel. As they drove south and viewed the beautiful coastline, it reminded them of California's Big Sur but tropical. They initially built their first cabin on the property in a precious old-growth jungle located to the rear of the parcel. The cabin became known as the "Robinson Crusoe dwelling." A small but comfortable cabina with a wrap-around deck that hovers over a creek that runs all year round. The bedroom, which is separate from the cabin, has a treehouse feel. The seller, being a Jack of all trades and a California-born master carpenter, was able to focus on his family's dream home as they comfortably resided in the "Robinson Crusoe" cabin.
